With Mrs. Ellis Celebrated 71st

NEWTOWN, Dec. 30.—Winfield Scott Ellis, 93, died Friday morning at his home here, after an illness of three weeks. Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon at the funeral home of Stacy Brown, with burial in Wrightstown Friends Burying Ground. Mr. Ellis and his wife celebrated their 71st wedding anniversary on December 22, 1864, in Philadelphia, by the Rev. Hanna, a Presbyterian clergyman. The ceremony was a double one, a brother of Mrs. Ellis, the late William A. Gorton, of Bristol, being wedded to Sarah Knox, at the same time. The survivors of Mr. Ellis in addition to his wife, are two sons, William J. Ellis, editor of the Delaware Valley Advance; and the Rev. Charles G. Ellis, a Presbyterian clergyman of Margaretville, N. Y.

Winfield S. Ellis was born at Buckmanville, Bucks county, June 9, 1842. He is a son of the late George Brown and Amy (Atkinson) Ellis. Winfield S. Ellis saw service in the Civil War, both as a carpenter in reconstruction work, and as a soldier in Company F, 40th Pennsylvania Regiment. He was a carpenter by trade, at which he was actively engaged for nearly 70 years. Learning the trade with his brother-in-law, the late Garrett B. Gorton, he became proficient in practically all branches of wood-working. He helped construct the George School at Newtown, and when it was completed in 1893 he was retained there to direct the interior carpenter work at the institution, which gave him the sobriquet "the artist in wood."

Three Shows Arranged For Two Days at Grand Theatre

Three shows are arranged for at the Grand Theatre for today and tomorrow. A special midnight show tomorrow, starting at 12:01 a. m., will feature Jack Haley and Ann Southern in "The Girl Friend," a musical comedy. The picture showing tonight, and at the two regularly scheduled shows tomorrow evening is "Frisco Kid," Warner Bros.' thrilling tale of the glamorous Barbary Coast of old San Francisco with James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay, Ricardo Cortez and Lili Damita.

The picture is set in the colorful background of the early fifties when the waterfront at the Golden Gate was a flaming panorama of gilded gambling halls and palaces of pleasure; when murder, arson, crimping and robbery were winked at by the authorities who derived huge revenues in bribes from the denizens of the underworld. The characters are based on historic personages of the time who flocked to the city of gold from every port in the world—adventurers all, ready to risk their fortunes or their lives on the throw of a die.

OSCEOLA MILLS, Dec. 30.—Wiping through an entire block of this community's main business section, fire caused by an over-heated fire early today destroyed four large buildings here today, at an estimated damage of $100,000. The fire wiped out two chain grocery stores, a clothing store, and an unoccupied office building. Eight persons, occupants of an apartment building, were driven into the street, but none were injured.

FIFTH WARD ASH COLLECTION

Ashes will be collected in the fifth ward tomorrow instead of on Wednesday, New Year's Day.

DENVER, Dec. 30.—(INS)—Detectives who have spent years in tracking down yeggs found themselves at a loss to perform one of the simpler tasks of the cracksmen's art when the need arose. Police Surgeon R. M. Campbell lost the keys to his desk in headquarters and needed to open one of the drawers. Not one of the 375 members of the force, plainclothes or uniformed, could "jimmy" the lock.

A former Bristol resident, Ebenezer Lund, 74, succumbed at his Valley Forge home. The deceased was actively engaged in the worsted business for many years.

TRANSFER ACT LEGALITY DELAYS SPAN REMOVAL

Agreement Reached On The Allocation of Project
Costs

COURT MUST DECIDE

MORRISVILLE, Dec. 30.—Removal of a bridge over the Pennsylvania Canal on West Bridge street has again been delayed pending a decision of the Pennsylvania State Supreme Court on the constitutionality of an act of the State Legislature regarding disposition of the canal.

The structure has been termed dangerous by borough officials and efforts had been made to obtain its removal to protect life.

Recently the attorney general of Pennsylvania declared an act, passed by the Legislature two years ago, was unconstitutional. By the terms of the legislation part of the canal was turned over to the State and ultimately it was planned to turn it into a park.

Interested parties seeking removal of the bridge met Friday to allocate costs. This issue had also delayed action. The new plan calls for a lowering of the span and then building a gradual grade from the top of the bridge to Pennsylvania avenue. The bridge would be two feet higher than the sidewalk in some parts.

It was at first proposed to construct a retaining wall along the sidewalk but this part of the plan was abandoned.

Those who attended the meeting on Friday included officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, officers of the canal company, attaches of the Public Service Commission, Mayor Thomas B. Stockham and Solicitor Willard S. Curtin. Agreement was reached, it was reported, on allocation of costs.

Rev. P. J. Brown Rounds Out 20 Years at Torresdale

TORRESDALE, Dec. 30.—The 20th anniversary of the coming of the Rev. Percy J. Brown to All Saints P. E. Church, was observed by the congregation yesterday. As part of the services the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, delivered the sermon and confirmed a class of candidates.

The Rev. Brown, who was born in Cambridge, England, graduated from the University of Pennsylvania with an A. B. degree in 1903. After a year of study at Oxford, he entered the Philadelphia Divinity School, graduating in 1907. He was ordained to the priesthood by the late Rt. Rev. John Scarborough, Bishop of New Jersey.

For a time the Rev. Brown served as chaplain of the Home for Crippled Children; and was also curate of St. Peter's, 3rd and Pine streets, Philadelphia; and canon of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, Mo. His wife is the former Gladys Eleanor Powell, daughter of the one-time British Consul General at Philadelphia.

SNOW SLIGHTLY DELAYS TRAFFIC; MERCURY UP

Roads in Rural Sections Are Reported Open and Only One Accident

TEMPERATURE AT 19

Traffic was slightly delayed today by the snow storm which began yesterday afternoon and continued throughout the night and this morning. Train service over the P. & R. kept close to schedule, but automobile traffic was greatly impeded. Most of the rural roads were open to traffic there being some drifts, but not severe enough to block travel.

Highway crews were called out early last evening and snow plows were kept running through the night. Motorists did experience considerable trouble last night due to impaired visibility.

Roads throughout Bucks County today were reported generally open.

When the car in which they were riding skidded on the snowy roadway and went into a ditch, early last evening, two Bristolans were slightly hurt.

The injured, Edward Kelber, 225 Monroe street, laceration over the left eye, requiring two stitches; his grandson, Roger Morse, laceration over upper lip, requiring five stitches. Both were treated at Harriman Hospital.

Mrs. Kelber, who was also in the machine, was unhurt.

The week-end "low" for temperature was reached at one o'clock Sunday morning, when the thermometer reading at Schmidt's greenhouses was eight degrees above zero. By eight o'clock yesterday morning the temperature had risen to 11. By six last evening it was 14; and then continued to 15 degrees at nine p. m.; 16 at 12 mid-night; 17 at two a. m.; 18 at three a. m.; 19 at four a. m., today, and it remained at 19 for several hours.

From border to border Pennsylvania was blanketed with a real old-fashioned winter snow that impeded traffic and transportation.

Although the snow ranged from four inches in the western sections to as much as 10 and 12 inches in the mountainous drifts further east, suffering was less than generally because the bitter wind of the previous week had subsided and temperatures were generally at 16 degrees.

Four inches of snow fell in Pittsburgh and air transportation was halted for several hours. Motor traffic was slowed up and trains, buses, and street cars encountered some difficulty.

The average snow in the Harrisburg district was 5½ inches. Six inches fell in Philadelphia and the flakes were still descending, today. Eight to 10 inches were reported in the Pocono mountains.

Planes were grounded in Philadelphia, motor traffic was impeded, but trains and buses were maintaining schedules.

More than one thousand workers were clearing the trolley tracks, and about two thousand city workers were clearing the streets.

Highways were reported in "fair condition" as the Highway crews were busy most of the night and this morning.

Betty Gow Not To Be With Lindberghs

(Copyrighted by I. N. S.)

Glasgow, Scotland, Dec. 30.—Betty Gow, the tight-lipped Scotch nursemaid who put baby Charles Lindbergh into his crib on that tragic night, nearly four years ago, and was the last person to see him alive, revealed today that she had been asked to return to the Lindbergh service to take care of the second baby, Jon.

"But I don't think I shall accept," said Miss Gow in her first interview since she returned to Glasgow, "because of the publicity surrounding employment with the Lindberghs."

On the eve of Lindbergh's arrival in Britain, Miss Gow descending the steps of the Glasgow suburban cottage told for the first time of her own feelings.

"The Lindberghs are the kindest people in the world," she said, "but my one desire is to avoid the public attention concentrated on everyone associated with them."

The nursemaid, working now in a Glasgow dress shop, indicated that she had forewarned a large income because she wants to forget all about those New Jersey days.

"I have been receiving offers to appear on the stage and on the screen, but I have turned them all down because it would mean raking up that case again."

"My one desire is to lead a quiet life," she said. "It seems that my whole life has been haunted by the tragedy. As much as I would like to work again for the Lindberghs, I cannot bear the thoughts of reviving old memories."

Italians Face Delay

Rome, Dec. 30.—Indirectly bearing out reports that Italy had run into more than she had planned for in Ethiopia, Premier Benito Mussolini today informed his cabinet there would be considerable delay before his army could make its next drive against the warriors of Emperor Haile Selassie.

Il Duce also declared that the now dead Anglo-French peace proposal would have given Italy more than half of Ethiopia, and fell short of satisfying Italy's minimum requirements and revealed a determination to concentrate a large section of Ethiopia.

This development came after Ethiopian warriors had stopped several fierce counter attacks against the Italians on both the northern and southern fronts.

(Note: Although the Italians claimed victory in these Ethiopian attacks, the Ethiopian government announced officially that the Emperor's men were victorious.)

Il Duce told his ministers a delay was ahead, despite the fact that the Ethiopian rainy season will begin in four months, thus ending abruptly until next Fall any military movements.

It was possible that the Italian-Ethiopian war may last several years.

HOLD PAIR FOR COURT, CHARGED WITH HOLD-UP

James Wapres Confesses, Implicating Roselle Darrah,
In Robbing Man of $19

WILL PLEAD GUILTY

The two colored men, Roselle Darrah and James Wapres, charged with holding up and robbing Salvatore Alphonso, on Lincoln avenue, early Saturday morning, were both held for court without bail by Justice of Peace James Guy.

Wapres admitted his part in the robbery and in his statement given to the police, implicated Darrah. Wapres alleges that Darrah held his hands over Alphonso's eyes and mouth while he, Wapres, went through the pockets of their victim.

Darrah denied the story of Wapres, but admitted being at the scene at the time and seeing Wapres rob Alphonso. Darrah also admitted receiving some of the $19 which it is alleged was taken from Alphonso.

The two men were given a hearing Saturday afternoon before Justice of Peace James Guy, in the Municipal Court.

According to Alphonso, he was held up by the two men on Lincoln avenue near Radcliffe street, early Saturday morning and while one man held his hands over his eyes and mouth, the other went through his pockets, taking $19. The three, it is stated, had been drinking in a local tap-room, where Alphonso had displayed his week's pay.

Chief Jones was advised this morning that both Darrah and Wapres had informed District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn at Doylestown that they would plead guilty on Monday.

GRIDIRON AS BIG BUSINESS

Events have sharply underscored the recent statement by President Angell of Yale University that professional football may supplant intercollegiate football as a crowd-drawing sport.

Dr. Angell did not flatly predict the replacement of intercollegiate football in the favor of the great American crowd. On the contrary, he made several reservations before he suggested that college football would eventually take second place to professional football in large cities and thus repeat baseball's story. But he was probably over-cautions.

Are the cash-and-carry gentlemen likely to overlook a Klondike of sportsdom whose potentialities are revealed not only by the paying customers who pass through the gates but by the fact that the navy athletic management received applications for $110,000 worth of tickets to the annual Army-Navy game in excess of its allotment?

Already the professional games have begun to draw big crowds in such centers as New York and Chicago. Recently a movement was started for a bigger "pro" football league. That the gridiron will become just as big business as the diamond now is seems quite reasonable to believe.

If such a condition comes about, the fortunate college will be the one which, having withheld from what Dr. Angell calls the "hired man" policy of college athletics, finds itself with an athletic plant on its hands which can be supported by normal college crowds.

Imagine the crowd that will seek the professional gridiron when the box-office shall have shaped football to the taste of the customers as recently it shaped what used to be the art of wrestling and now is a free-for-all mimic fight.

CORN-HOGS AT LONG RANGE

The confidence of Secretary Wallace and the AAA in its future, and in the future as a general proposition, is curiously demonstrated as the "corn-hog" figures and plans for 1936 are announced. They provide an allowance of thirty-five cents per bushel to the corn farmers and of $1.25 per head for quota hogs.

So far we have before us largely what was anticipated. But the AAA goes much further and announces that on November 30 of next year the subsidies for 1937 will be announced, but that the corn payments will be "not less than thirty cents a bushel" while hog allowances will be "not less than $1.25 a head."

At least on this basis Mr. Wallace has made it what he wished to make it all along—a two-year program. But one wonders at the far vision, if it is that, which permits the agricultural pundits at Washington to determine the minimum figures for hog-corn control for a period more than twelve months distant.

The 1933 securities law has been questioned. People have been questioning 1933 securities for a long time.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol, June 18, 1874. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

Beware of Tramps—On Wednesday of last week the wife of Mr. Edwin N. Booz, on the Bristol Road near Schenck's Station, was attracted to the front door of her house by several knocks, and on opening the door she saw a respectfully dressed man, who stated that he had not eaten anything all day and begged her to give him something to eat. Mrs. Booz left the man standing at the front door and proceeded through the entry to the kitchen to procure some bread and meat, and when she returned to the door he had disappeared and could not be found anywhere around the outside of the house. Mrs. Booz then called her husband who was lying down in the sitting-room, and his suspicions being aroused he proceeded to search through the house, and after examining all the second-story rooms the man was found very snugly stowed away under the bed in a spare room, and upon being discovered he made a pretense of being very much under the influence of liquor; but upon being collared by Mr. Booz and receiving a good shaking, he made good speed in getting outside of the house, and when he reached the road he refused to go any farther, until Mr. Booz started after his dog which caused him to leave quickly in the direction of Bristol. This incident should teach all persons to keep their front doors closed and locked, especially when they leave "tramps" and beggars standing in front of them, and thus they will escape being robbed and perhaps murdered.

NEWPORTVILLE—Mr. H. Fry has opened a nice and comfortable ice cream saloon at Schenck's Station. The boarding house at the same place is filled with boarders from the city, and under the able and efficient management of Mr. I. S. Flint, is destined to become a popular resort.

William Guy, a boy of about seventeen years, committed suicide at Otter Bridge, on Sunday afternoon, by shooting himself through the head with a horse pistol. This young man's career has been short but chequered. When but twelve years old, he ran away from home, and went to Mexico, thence to Santa Fe, then out among the Indians, and finally took a trip to Europe, returning home last year pretty well cured of his roaming disposition. He secured a position on his father's tug boat, but did not stay long, then tried selling papers on the cars, but getting tired of work and life, he cut both short with the pistol bullet. He was buried on Wednesday.

Mr. Jonathan Knight, on the Hyberry Pike, at its intersection by the Piquessing creek, has made an addition to his flour mill by raising the entire building one story in height, thus giving him increased facilities for grinding grain.

One of our usual Saturday night rows occurred last week. Constable Pettit picked up a couple of tramps who were making considerable noise on the street, and essayed to convey them to his "wanderers home." On arriving at Walmesley's corner, the woman threw herself on the ground, and made a violent lunge at the constable with a pair of scissors, inflicting a severe wound in his hand. This roused the ire of our Chief of Police who grasped her by the throat, and gave her windpipe a pretty serious compression. The Burgess happened to come along and walked the male tramp off to the lock up in double quick time. With the aid of some bystanders, Pettit carried his victim the remainder of the way, and on Monday they were sent "via stage," securely hopped, to help fill up that old jail at Doylestown.

The commencement exercises of Bellevue Institute at Attleborough takes place today. The graduates are Lizzie E. Goheen, Doylestown, Pa.; Lizzie W. Vansant, Yardleyville, Pa.; and Agnes Cunningham, Newtown, Pa.

A party of three little fellows, who ought to be kept at home until they are old enough to manage a boat, borrowed a yacht on Tuesday for a sail. They managed to get within about six feet of the bow of the ferry-boat, when their screams started the pilot, who quickly backed water, and saved them from being run down. The little chap at the helm shouted to his companions to get out an oar, which they exerted their utmost strength to do, but finding themselves unable to lift the huge oar above the deck of the boat, were considerably relieved by the backing of the ferry. In attempting to turn the yacht during a heavy blow, the mast was broken off even with the deck, thereby entailing expense of probably $100 upon the owner, who should have had sufficient sense not to trust his craft with such little shavers.

NEWPORTVILLE — Mr. William Barry, farmer for C. N. Taylor, has the finest field of corn within a circuit of many miles.

I. C. Petter, Esq., has taken possession of his new offices. The firm of White & Kuhn, proprietors of the Flushing Steam Saw Mill, have almost completed their large wharf above the mill. A strong force of men and carts have been busily engaged for nearly two weeks filling in the wharf with gravel. The wharf is very conveniently situated and about seventy-five feet in length, and constructed in the most approved manner from the best of materials.

FASHION PARADE

By Orry-Kelly

(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD — (INS) — Sporty more than tailored . . . "boxy" rather than swaggy . . . full but not flared . . . That's the new line for a series of new coats I am doing for the screen. It's a style I first introduced on Ruby Keeler in "Shipmates Forever" . . . an advanced spring model of white flannel, with the little boxy jacket having box pleats down the back that jibed with the box pleats on the skirt. New I'm making three more of them for Ruby's new picture, "Colleen" . . . and three mannequins will wear them in a fashion show that is part of the picture. One is tulle . . . five layers of it, for evening . . . A second is tweed, in plaid, worn with a plain sports dress . . . While the third, in a lovely metal moire has enormous patch pockets and goes with a new Palm Beach sports dinner dress.

Lengths of these coats vary, but are best in the finger-tip or the knee length. Some have such details as patch or diagonal pockets, little-boy collars, or no collar at all. Others have a deep yoke, with many pleats giving fullness to the back. But regardless of fullness, the coat hangs straight, not flared like the swagger.

Besides the tulle, tweed and moire I have mentioned, I intend doing more of these coats in almost every conceivable material, for occasions clear around the clock. But the stiffer materials . . . Bengaline, Lyons velvet, and the like, as well as metal cloths . . . will be found better, giving a jaunty, sporty look that the softer swaggers do not have. When working with a supple cloth, lining or stiffening, or rows of parallel stitching, will make up the "body" lacking in the material.

The advantage of these new coats, I believe, lies in the new, fresh-looking silhouette that they achieve particularly when combined with a slim skirt . . . in their becomingness to nearly every type of figure . . . and in their practicality for all sorts of costumes, from the out-and-out sports to the formal.

They have dash—and swing—and the casual air American women love. So I think the feminine world will go for them.

"WIFE IN CUSTODY" by BEATRICE LUBITZ

CHAPTER XLII

The library, like the living room, was ghostly in its linen shroud. The room was airless as a tomb. He unfastened the catch and threw up the window. He leaned far out, gasping hungrily for air but the hot moist fog brought him no relief. Below the street lay like a soiled ribbon on which dashed shiny black bugs.

He drew back into the room. His head was curiously light and empty. He groped for a lamp on the library table. The soft silk shade had been removed and the bulb gleamed nakedly against his aching eyes.

On the table was a picture of his son taken when the boy was an infant, lying on his side on a chintz-covered couch.

Dirk looked at the child as if he were seeing him for the first time. He studied the round sweet face and the toothless smile.

"Good old chap," Dirk whispered. "It's a rotten trick but I'm licked. God help you that you do better."

He laid the picture in its leather frame face upward on the covered table. Then he carefully placed his glasses on top of it. He walked slowly over to the open window. In his mind's eye he was still choking Irene. He closed his eyes against the vision. He could see the blue veins throbbing in her low white forehead. Irene's beauty rose before him to torture him. He groaned aloud.

"Irene . . . Irene . . . Oh, Helen," he whispered, "Helen, my poor lost girl."

He peered up near-sightedly at the sky. It was heavy with clouds. A rumble of distant thunder shook the heavens. Every now and then heat lightning rent the clouds apart for an instant.

"There will be rain," he thought, "and maybe that will bring relief."

He peered down but without his glasses there was nothing to see but a blank. Quite calmly he lifted his leg over the sill, then brought the other up. He sat for a second on the ledge. A cool breeze suddenly sprang up and brushed against his wet forehead.

"Ah, that feels good," he murmured.

He slid down of the window sill into a sudden roar of fresh cold air.

"I've arranged everything," he said gently.

"I can't face it," she moaned. "Irene, dearest, if you don't calm yourself, I'll have to get a doctor. What good does all this moaning and screaming do, dear? You can't bring him back."

"Bring him back? I didn't kill him. She killed him! His sin killed him. Your wife! She killed him," Irene accused hysterically.

"Irene, you don't know what you are saying."

"I don't, eh? Listen, Walter, do you know who Dirk killed himself?" she demanded fiercely. "I'll tell you." She pressed her tear-swollen face against his. "I found out about him and Helen. Your wife!" She laughed harshly. "When I faced him with the truth, he couldn't bear it. That's why he killed himself," she panted.

"You're mad," Walt whispered. "It's the truth."

Walt didn't believe a word of it, but as Irene raced on with the story he began to wonder dazedly if it could possibly be true. . . . At first to humor her, he agreed with her but as she went on refreshingly his memory about this event and that, he was consumed by a hard, fierce anger against Helen. Even if it weren't true—and she had not been unfaithful—Helen was none the less guilty of placing herself in the position of rival to Irene, his sister! Irene, the queen of the family to whom he owed so much! That his wife—Helen—Helen whom he loved and trusted—that she should have done this to Irene—and to him! Irene, sensing the rage that was surging through him, cunningly brought up times and places where Helen and Dirk had been intimate. "And right under your nose," she taunted him.

She had everything at her fingertips. She had been thinking of nothing but Helen's perfidy since the policeman came in with mute evidence of the tragedy. She clung to Helen's guilt, magnified and emphasized it in her mind and now she was overflowing with poison. If it weren't that she was determined to believe that Helen was the cause of the tragedy and to tell Walter and have him punish Helen, she couldn't have born the horror of Dirk's suicide. Helen was to blame! Helen killed him. Helen, the murderess—

"I don't want to see anyone, Walt. No one is to come in to me. I want to be alone. You'll take care of everything."

"Yes, I'll take care of everything."

"I don't want to see anyone."

"I won't let anyone in. But let me get you a nurse or a maid."

"I don't want anyone," she shrieked. "Don't let anyone in to me."

"All right, dear, I won't."

"And you'll throw Helen out?"

"I'll tend to her after the funeral."

"Don't let her see him!"

"Please, Irene, unless you calm yourself I won't do a thing."

She calmed herself with an effort. "Walter, I have a passport in my desk. I planned to go abroad before Wells was born. I don't want to see anyone. I want to go away. I can't face it, Walter. I don't want anyone to look at me. I've got to get away from everybody. . . . Right after the funeral, can you book passage for me secretly so that no one will know? So many boats sail at midnight now. You could slip me aboard; no one will see or know."

"Alone?"

"Alone. I don't want to see anyone. I must go away. I can't face it," she gasped.

"I'll do everything for you, dear. You try to sleep. I'll do everything you say. I'll get you off to Europe. I'll do everything. I promise you."

"Promise me you'll punish Helen. Promise me, or I'll kill myself too."

He was at his wit's end.

"I promise everything," he soothed her. "I promise."

But Irene couldn't sleep. All night she cried and ranted and Walter at her bedside, numb with fatigue, tried to comfort her. Sometimes her voice died away and she dozed for a few seconds; then she'd jump up with a start and cry out her love for Dirk.

"Dirk, Dirk," she sobbed. "You know I loved you. I loved you. You loved me but that sneaking white thief came between us."

She tore her hair and raged against Helen. Walter, aching with fatigue and anguish, tried to quiet her. Utterly spent, she'd cry softly.

"Only I am to blame. I killed him. I robbed him of his work and his hopes. I goaded him. Oh, God, kill me too! Strike me dead! Don't let me live and breathe and think. I'm dying with anguish. Oh, God, pity me. Put an end to me, help me!"

Tears poured down Walter's face. She clung to him. She tore his shirt with her nails. All night long he held her to him while remorse and hatred tore her asunder.

The sun rose hot and clear in the east with a promise of another scorching day. Toward morning Irene fell into a fitful, gasping doze. Irene tiptoed into the bathroom where a cold shower revived him. He found a shirt of Dirk's. His was in shreds. No sooner was he dressed than the phone rang.

Anastasia called, Agnes called, Stella called, Cecily Terhune called.

Walter, his nerves taut, answered them and tried to keep from shouting for them to leave him alone.

The clang and beat of his sisters demanding details. At eight Helen called. She had seen the morning papers. She was beside herself with anguish and horror but she only asked, "Oh, Walt, is it true?"

"Yes," he answered harshly.

"Let me come and help you, dearest."

"No, no," he shouted.

"Very well, darling. I know what you must be facing. If you want me, just call. I'll be ready to come."

He hung up on her without answering.

The day was a nightmare for Walter. His jaw set, his soul frozen with the horror he had still to face with Helen, he stood his ground before Irene's door and permitted no one, not even her beloved Dr. Fussnager to enter. By telephone, with Cecily Terhune's help, he arranged for the funeral. The telephone rang incessantly. Walter hadn't time to send down for a cup of coffee. He smoked all his cigarettes then emptied all the cigarette boxes he could find around the apartment.

By noon his sisters arrived clamoring to see Irene.

"I want to help her with prayers," Agnes gulped, her eyes red and swollen with weeping.

"You can't see her."

"I must see her!"

"No one will see her while I'm still alive to forbid it," he yelled. "Irene wants to be alone!"

Neither his mother nor the Terhunes did he permit to open her door. He himself brought in trays from the restaurant below and she returned them untouched.

At three o'clock Carl relieved him. Walter threw himself down on the couch in the living-room and slept like a weary dog. He awoke at six wet with perspiration.

"Helen phoned twice," Carl told him as he gave Walter the accumulated messages. Walter set his jaw. He did the necessary phoning but did not call his wife.

He spent a second night keeping vigil with his sister.

It was decided to hold the funeral on the morning of the third day from the undertaking parlors. Irene still in bed, would not go, but Walter promised to look her in so that no one would disturb her while he was gone.

And still Walter did not telephone Helen. She called for the dozenth time the morning of the funeral. She was hurt at Walter's brusque voice when he did answer. Her only reproach was that he would not let her help him.

"Are you sure you don't need me, dear? I want to help."

"No," he retorted.

And finally Helen was stung by the note in his voice.

"Very well, I'll see you at the funeral," she said.

GRIDIRON AS BIG BUSINESS

Events have sharply underscored the recent statement by President Angell of Yale University that professional football may supplant intercollegiate football as a crowd-drawing sport.

Dr. Angell did not flatly predict the replacement of intercollegiate football in the favor of the great American crowd. On the contrary, he made several reservations before he suggested that college football would eventually take second place to professional football in large cities and thus repeat baseball's story. But he was probably over-cautious.

Are the cash-and-carry gentlemen likely to overlook a Klondike of sportsdom whose potentialities are revealed not only by the paying customers who pass through the gates but by the fact that the navy athletic management received applications for $110,000 worth of tickets to the annual Army-Navy game in excess of its allotment?

Already the professional games have begun to draw big crowds in such centers as New York and Chicago. Recently a movement was started for a bigger "pro" football league. That the gridiron will become just as big business as the diamond now is seems quite reasonable to believe.

If such a condition comes about, the fortunate college will be the one which, having withheld from what Dr. Angell calls the "hired man" policy of college athletics, finds itself with an athletic plant on its hands which can be supported by normal college crowds.

Imagine the crowd that will seek the professional gridiron when the box-office shall have shaped football to the taste of the customers as recently it shaped what used to be the art of wrestling and now is a free-for-all mimic fight.

CORN-HOGS AT LONG RANGE

The confidence of Secretary Wallace and the AAA in its future, and in the future as a general proposition, is curiously demonstrated as the "corn-hog" figures and plans for 1936 are announced. They provide an allowance of thirty-five cents per bushel to the corn farmers and of $1.25 per head for hogs.

So far we have before us largely what was anticipated. But the AAA goes much further and announces that on November 30 of next year the subsidies for 1937 will be announced, but that the corn payments will be "not less than thirty cents a bushel" while hog allowances will be "not less than $1.25 a head."

At least on this basis Mr. Wallace has made it what he wished to make it all along—a two-year program. But one wonders at the far vision, if it is that, which permits the agricultural pundits at Washington to determine the minimum figures for hog-corn control for a period more than twelve months distant.

The 1933 securities law has been questioned. People have been questioning 1933 securities for a long time.

The radio amateur who starts at the bottom is the one who gets $5 for having the gong pulled on him—not, however, before he mentions which coffee it is he sells most of at the grocery store where he sweeps up.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol, June 18, 1874. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

Beware of Tramps—On Wednesday of last week the wife of Mr. Edwin N. Booz, on the Bristol Road near Schenck's Station, was attracted to the front door of her house by several knocks, and on opening the door she saw a respectably dressed man, who stated that he had not eaten anything all day and begged her to give him something to eat. Mrs. Booz left the man standing at the front door and proceeded through the entry to the kitchen to procure some bread and meat, and when she returned to the door he had disappeared and could not be found anywhere around the outside of the house. Mrs. Booz then called her husband who was lying down in the sitting-room, and his suspicions being aroused he proceeded to search through the house, and after examining all the second-story rooms the man was found very snugly stowed away under the bed in a spare room, and upon being discovered he made a pretense of being very much under the influence of liquor, but upon being collared by Mr. Booz and receiving a good shaking, he made good speed in getting outside of the house, and when he reached the road he refused to go any farther, until Mr. Booz started after his dog which caused him to leave quickly in the direction of Bristol. This incident should teach all persons to keep their front doors closed and locked, especially when they leave "tramps" and beggars standing in front of them, and thus they will escape being robbed and perhaps murdered.

NEWPORTVILLE—Mr. H. Fry has opened a nice and comfortable ice cream saloon at Schenck's Station. The boarding house at the same place is filled with boarders from the city, and under the able and efficient management of Mr. I. S. Flint, is destined to become a popular resort.

William Guy, a boy of about seven years, committed suicide at Otter Bridge, on Sunday afternoon, by shooting himself through the head with a horse pistol. This young man's career has been short but chequered. When but twelve years old, he ran away from home, and went to Mexico, thence to Santa Fe, then out among the Indians, and finally took a trip to Europe, returning home last year pretty well cured of his roaming disposition. He secured a position on his father's tug boat, but did not stay long, then tried selling papers on the cars, but getting tired of work and life, he cut both short with the pistol bullet. He was buried on Wednesday.

Mr. Jonathan Knight, on the Byberry Pike, at its intersection by the Pequeening creek, has made an addition to his floor mill by raising the entire building one story in height, thus giving him increased facilities for grinding grain.

One of our usual Saturday night rows occurred last week. Constable Pettit picked up a couple of tramps who were making considerable noise on the street, and essayed to convey them to his "wanderers home." On arriving at Walmley's corner, the woman threw herself on the ground, and made a violent lunge at the constable with a pair of scissors, inflicting a severe wound in his hand. This roused the ire of our Chief of Police who grasped her by the throat, and gave her windpipe a pretty serious compression. The Burgess happened to come along and walked the male tramp off to the lock up in double quick time. With the aid of some bystanders, Pettit carried his victim the remainder of the way, and on Monday they were sent "via stage," securely hopped, to help fill up that old jail at Doylestown.

Eight hundred marriageable young ladies, for whom there are no visible prospective husbands, is what's the matter with Easton.

The commencement exercises of Bellevue Institute at Attleborough takes place today. The graduates are Lizzie E. E. Goheen, Doylestown, Pa.; Lizzie W. Vansant, Yardleyville, Pa.; and Agnes Cunningham, Newtown, Pa.

A party of three little fellows, who ought to be kept at home until they are old enough to manage a boat, borrowed a yacht on Tuesday for a sail. They managed to get within about six feet of the bow of the ferry-boat, when their screams startled the pilot, who quickly backed water, and saved them from being run down. The little chap at the helm shouted to his companions to get out an oar, which they exerted their utmost strength to do, but finding themselves unable to lift the huge oar above the deck of the boat, were considerably relieved by the backing of the ferry. In attempting to turn the yacht during a heavy blow, the mast was broken off even with the deck, thereby entailing expense of probably $100 upon the owner, who should have had sufficient sense not to trust his craft with such little shavers.

NEWPORTVILLE—Mr. William Barry, farmer for C. N. Taylor, has the finest field of corn within a circuit of many miles.

I. C. Fetter, Esq., has taken possession of his new offices.

The firm of White & Kuhn, proprietors of the Flushing Steam Saw Mill, have almost completed their large wharf above the mill. A strong force of men and carts have been busily engaged for nearly two weeks filling in the wharf with gravel. The wharf is very conveniently situated and about seventy-five feet in length, and constructed in the most approved manner from the best of materials.

FASHION PARADE

By Orry-Kelly
 (Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—Sporty more than tailored... "boxy" rather than swaggy... full but not flared... That's the new line for a series of new coats I am doing for the screen. It's a style I first introduced on Ruby Keeler in "Shipmates Forever"... an advanced spring model of white flannel, with the little box jacket having box pleats down the back that jibed with the box pleats on the skirt. Now I'm making three more of them for Ruby's new picture, "Colleen" and three mannequins will wear them in a fashion show that is part of the picture. One is tulle... five layers of it, for evening... A second is tweed, in plaid, worn with a plain sports dress... While the third, in a lovely metal moire has enormous patch pockets and goes with a new Palm Beach sports dinner dress.

Lengths of these coats vary, but are best in the finger-tip or the knee length. Some have such details as patch or diagonal pockets, little-boy collars, or no collar at all. Others have a deep yoke, with many pleats giving fullness to the back. But regardless of fullness, the coat hangs straight, not flared like the swaggar.

Besides the tulle, tweed and moire I have mentioned, I intend doing more of these coats in almost every conceivable material, for occasions clear around the clock. But the stiffer materials... Bengaline, Lyons velvet, and the like, as well as metal cloths... will be found better, giving a jaunty, sporty look that the softer swaggers do not have. When working with a supple cloth, lining or stiffening, or rows of parallel stitching, will make up the "body" lacking in the material.

The advantage of these new coats, I believe, lies in the new, fresh-looking silhouette that they achieve particularly when combined with a slim skirt... in their becomingness to nearly every type of figure... and in their practicality for all sorts of costumes, from the out-and-out sports to the formal.

They have dash—and swing—and the casual air American women love. So I think the feminine world will go for them.

"WIFE IN CUSTODY" by BEATRICE LUBITZ

CHAPTER XLI

The library, like the living room, was ghostly in its linen shroud. The room was airless as a tomb. He unfastened the curtain and threw up the window. He leaned far out, gasping hungrily for air but the hot moist fog brought him no relief. Below the street lay like a soiled ribbon on which dashed shiny black bugs.

He drew back into the room. His head was curiously light and empty. He groped for a lamp on the library table. The soft silk shade had been removed and the bulb gleamed nakedly against his aching lids. On the table was a picture of his son taken when the boy was an infant, lying on his side on a chintz-covered couch.

Dirk looked at the child as if he were seeing him for the first time. He studied the round sweet face and the toothless smile.

"Good old chap," Dirk whispered. "It's a rotten trick but I'm licked. God help you that you do better."

He laid the picture in its leather frame face upward on the covered table. Then he carefully placed his glasses on top of it. He walked slowly over to the open window. In his mind's eye he was still choking Irene. He closed his eyes against the vision. He could see the blue veins throbbing in her low white forehead. Irene's beauty rose before him to torture him. He groaned aloud.

"Irene... Irene... Oh, Helen," he whispered, "Helen, my poor lost girl."

He peered up near-sightedly at the sky. It was heavy with clouds. A rumble of distant thunder shook the heavens. Every now and then heat lightning rent the clouds apart for an instant.

"There will be rain," he thought, "and maybe that will bring relief." He peered down but without his glasses there was nothing to see but a blank. Quite calmly he lifted his leg over the sill, then brought the other up. He sat for a second on the ledge. A cool breeze suddenly sprang up and brushed against his wet forehead.

"Ah, that feels good," he murmured.

He slid down off the window sill into a sudden roar of fresh cold air.

Walter reached his sister's apartment at eleven o'clock. He had driven madly through the night in a heavy rain and lightning storm that broke just as he started out. Irene's shriek ringing in his ears. The apartment was crowded with people, policemen, reporters, neighbors. Irene was locked in her room. She would see no one but when she heard his voice she let him in. She crouched in the corner of her bed and when Walter saw her face, his heart contracted with pity for her. "Irene," he yelled, "my dear, my dear." He held out his arms and with a cry of infinite anguish, she fell into them and wept brokenly against his breast.

"I loved him. I loved him so! It was an accident," she sobbed. "He leaped over for air."

"Yes, it was an accident," he repeated dully. But Walter had already heard that the policeman on the beat, admitted by Irene who hadn't missed Dirk, found the glasses on top of the baby's picture. He had brought up Dirk's wallet. Irene didn't need to be told. She had followed the policeman into the apartment, too surprised even to question the intrusion. One glance at the wallet, the empty library, the open window and she knew.

She screamed Walter's number into the telephone, and before she had finished shrieking for him to come she fainted, for the first time in her life.

"I can't face it, Walt," she gasped. "I can't face it. I want to die. I can't face the disgrace."

"It was an accident, Irene. There is nothing to face."

"I know, Walt. I know. I grieved him. I loved him so. Oh, Walt, I loved him so," she sobbed brokenly.

"Oh, Irene, they'll hear you in the next room. There are policemen and detectives there."

"Where is he?" she whimpered.

"I've arranged everything," he said gently.

"I can't face it," she moaned.

"Irene, dearest, if you don't calm yourself, I'll have to get a doctor. What good does all this moaning and screaming do, dear? You can't bring him back."

"Bring him back? I didn't kill him. She killed him! His sin killed him. Your wife! She killed him," Irene accused hysterically.

"Irene, you don't know what you are saying."

"I don't, eh? Listen, Walter, do you know why Dirk killed himself? She demanded fiercely. "I'll tell you." She pressed her tear-swollen face against his. "I found out about him and Helen. Your wife! She laughed harshly. "When I faced him with the truth, he couldn't bear it. That's why he killed himself," she panted.

"You're mad," Walt whispered. "It's the truth."

Walt didn't believe a word of it, but as Irene raced on with the story he began to wonder dazedly if it could possibly be true. At first to humor her, he listened to her but as she relentlessly refreshed his memory about this event and that, he was consumed by a hard, fierce anger against Helen. Even if it weren't true—and she had not been unfaithful—Helen was none the less guilty of placing herself in the position of ruin to Irene, Irene, his sister! Irene, the queen of the family to whom he owed so much! That his wife—Helen—Helen whom he loved and trusted—that she should have done this to Irene—and to him!

Irene, sensing the rage that was surging through him, cunningly brought up times and places where Helen and Dirk had been intimate. "And right under your nose," she taunted him.

She had everything at her fingertips. She had been thinking of nothing but Helen's perfidy since the policeman came in with mute evidence of the tragedy. She clung to Helen's guilt, magnified and emphasized it in her mind and now she was poisoning it with poison. If it weren't that she was determined to believe that Helen was the cause of the tragedy and to tell Walter and have him punish Helen, she couldn't have born the horror of Dirk's suicide. Helen was to blame! Helen killed him. Helen, the murderer—

"I don't want to see anyone, Walt. No one is to come in to me. I want to be alone. You'll take care of everything."

"Yes, I'll take care of everything."

"I don't want to see anyone."

"I won't let anyone in. But let me get you a nurse or a maid."

"I don't want anyone," she shrieked. "Don't let anyone in to me."

"All right, dear, I won't."

"And you'll throw Helen out?"

"I'll tend to her after the funeral."

"Don't let her see him!"

"Please, Irene, unless you calm yourself I won't do a thing."

She calmed herself with an effort. "Walter, I have a passport in my desk. I planned to go abroad before Wells was born. I don't want to see anyone. I want to go away. I can't face it, Walter. I don't want anyone to look at me. I've got to get away from everybody... Right after the funeral, can you book passage for me secretly so that no one will know? So many boats sail at midnight now. You could slip me aboard; no one will see or know."

"Alone?"

"Alone. I don't want to see anyone. I must go away. I can't face it," she gasped.

"I'll do everything for you, dear. I'll do everything you say. Now you try to sleep. I'll do everything you say. I'll get you off to Europe. I'll do everything. I promise you."

"Promise me you'll punish Helen. Promise me, or I'll kill myself too."

He was at his wit's end.

"I promise everything," he soothed her. "I promise."

But Irene couldn't sleep. All night she cried and ranted and Walter at her bedside, numb with fatigue, tried to comfort her. Sometimes he tried to die away and she dozed for a few seconds; then she'd jump up with a start and cry out her love for Dirk.

"Dirk, Dirk," she sobbed. "You know I loved you. I loved you. You loved me, but that speaking white thing came between us."

She tore her hair and raged against Helen. Walter, aching with fatigue and anguish, tried to quiet her. Utterly spent, she'd cry softly.

"Only I am to blame. I killed him. I robbed him of his work and his hopes. I goaded him. Oh, God, kill me too! Strike me dead! Don't let me live and breathe and think. I'm dying with anguish. Oh, God, pity me. Put an end to me, help me!"

Tears poured down Walter's face. She clung to him. She tore his shirt with her nails. All night long he held her to him while remorse and hatred tore her asunder.

The sun rose hot and clear in the east with a promise of another scorching day. Toward morning Irene fell into a fitful, gasping doze. Walter tiptoed into the bathroom where a cold shower revived him. He found a shirt of Dirk's. His was in shreds. No sooner was he dressed than the phone rang.

Anastasia called. Agnes called. Stella called. Cecily Telephone called. Walter, his nerves taut, answered them and tried to keep from shouting for them to leave him alone!

The clang and beat of his sisters' demanding details. At eight Helen called. She had seen the morning papers. She was beside herself with anguish and horror but she only asked, "Oh, Walt, is it true?"

"Yes," he answered harshly.

"Let me come and help you, dearest."

"No, no," he shouted.

"Very well, darling. I know what you must be facing. If you want me, just call. I'll be ready to come."

He hung up on her without answering.

The day was a nightmare for Walter. His jaw set, his soul frozen with the horror he had still to face with Helen, he stood his ground before Irene's door and permitted no one, not even her beloved Dr. Fussengel to enter. By telephone, with Cecily Terhune's help, he arranged for the funeral. The telephone rang incessantly. Walter had time to send down for a cup of coffee. He smoked all his cigarettes then emptied all the cigarette boxes he could find around the apartment.

By noon his sisters arrived clamoring to see Irene.

"I want to help her with prayers," Agnes gulped, her eyes red and swollen with weeping.

"You can't see her."

"I must see her!"

"No one will see her while I'm still alive to forbid it," he yelled. "Irene wants to be alone!"

Neither his mother nor the Terhunes did he permit to open her door. He himself brought in trays from the restaurant below and she returned them untouched.

At three o'clock Carl relieved him. Walter threw himself down on the couch in the living-room and slept like a weary dog. He awoke at six wet with perspiration.

"Helen phoned twice," Carl told him as he gave Walter the accumulated messages. Walter set his jaw. He did the necessary phoning but did not call his wife.

He spent a second night keeping vigil with his sister.

It was decided to hold the funeral on the morning of the third day from the undertaking parlors. Irene still in bed, would not go, but Walter promised to look in on her so that no one would disturb her while he was gone.

And still Walter did not telephone Helen. She called for the dozenth time the morning of the funeral. She was hurt at Walter's brusque voice when he did answer. Her only remark was that he would not let her help him.

"Are you sure you don't need me, dear? I want to help."

"No," he retorted.

And finally Helen was stung by the note in his voice.

"Very well, I'll see you at the funeral," she said.

MOOSE PLANS VICTORY OVER ST. ANN'S TONIGHT

The Moose will attempt to redeem itself from its showing last week as it meets the St. Ann's quintet tonight in the second game of the Bristol Amateur League schedule. In the first game, the Hibernians will try to keep its hold on fourth place when it tackles the Y. M. C. club. Games will be played on the Italian Mutual Aid floor.

The Moozers bowed to the Hibernians in its last scheduled tilt and the defeat caused them to drop from first place. The Radcliffe street boys are hampered by the absence of Herbie Lawrence who is out with an injured knee. "Pankie" Fine is filling the position of Lawrence.

St. Ann's is signing new players all the time and last night added Alex Kanter to its list. Kanter is the brother of "Izzy," one of the leading scorers of the circuit. Joe Britton has also signed with the Saints.

Marty Fallon and Charley Hendricks are standing pat on their Hibernians and Y. M. C. teams, respectively. This tilt is expected to be close and interesting from the start.

First fray will begin at eight o'clock sharp.

MANY KEPT TITLES IN MINOR SPORTS

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—(INS)—Many champions of so-called minor sports retained their titles in 1935—a year which saw increased interest in all sports fields.

Rowing

California nosed out Cornell in 38th annual Intercollegiate Regatta at Poughkeepsie, winning by inches in 18:52 for four miles. Washington, Navy, Syracuse, Penn and Columbia finished in that order. Washington won both the Freshman and Junior Varsity races.

The strong University of Pennsylvania crew won the Blackwell Cup, on the Schuylkill; repeated in the Childs Cup on Lake Carnegie, Princeton; and took the Adams Cup on the Severn.

Harvard defeated Yale by 30 lengths in their annual classic at New London. At Putney-on-Thames, Cambridge scored its twelfth successive victory over Oxford, winning by four and a half lengths before over a million spectators.

Swimming

Honors among the natators were well divided with Ralph Flanagan, of Miami, winning the National A. A. U. mile and 880 yard free style events, John Higgins, of Providence, scoring in the 220 yard breast stroke and 300 meter medley, and with Dick Degener, of Detroit, scoring a double in the diving events.

Other champions were Peter Flick, N. Y. A. C., 100 meter free style; Jimmy Gihlula, Detroit, 220 yard free style; John Macdonis, Yale, 440 yard free style; Adolph Kiefer, Chicago, 100 meter backstroke.

Lenore Kight, of Homestead, Pa., won two titles in the women's events, garnering the one mile and the 880 yard free style. Olive McKean, Seattle, took up the 100 meter crown, and Elizabeth Kompa, New York, was champion of the 220 yard back stroke class. Katherine Rawls, of Miami, was 220 yard breast stroke champion, and the diving honors were divided between 11-year-old Mary Hoerger, of Miami, and Dorothy Poynton Hill, of Los Angeles.

Motor Racing

Sir Malcolm Campbell's world record breaking run of 301 miles per hour on the Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah; Kelly Pettillo's triumph in the 500 mile Indianapolis Speedway race; and Campbell's stock car record runs at Daytona Beach, Fla., featured the 1935 automobile year.

Campbell, in the early months of the year, attempted to reach 500 miles per hour at Daytona, but a series of incidents—adverse weather and beach conditions, minor defects in his racer—thwarted his goal, although he did hit 233, 270 and 276 miles per hour on three runs, the latter being a temporary record.

Pettillo outdistanced a star fled over the brick Indianapolis track Memorial Day to win the coveted event of the automobile field, which claimed a few more deaths.

Basketball

For the second consecutive year, New York University outdistanced all rivals to take the Intercollegiate Basketball Crown. Starting the 1934-35 season with 16 straight victories, N. Y. U. ran that string to 27 straight before succumbing to Yale at New Haven, 33-29. The record for this season was 19 wins out of 20 games.

N. Y. U. played top opposition throughout the season, gaining victories over such rivals as Notre Dame, Kentucky, Temple, Manhattan (twice), C. C. N. Y. among others. Duquesne University of Pittsburgh and University of Pittsburgh were other outstanding teams of the country. Columbia won the Eastern Intercollegiate Conference title, swamping Pennsylvania in a playoff after each had tied for the season with 10 wins and two defeats.

Hockey

As would seem proper in the case of two teams engaged in their national pastime, the Montreal Maroons and the

Sugar Bowl Honeys

By BURNLEY

One of the most colorful football games to be seen in years is in prospect when the spectacular Texas Christian grid warriors pit their daring aerial attack against the powerful juggernaut that represents Louisiana State on the striped field.

Several All-Americans and near All-Americans will be performing in this great Sugar Bowl battle on New Year's Day. Gaynell Tinsley, marvelous Tiger wingman, was very nearly a unanimous choice for the end post on the countless mythical "all"-teams.

Sammy Baugh, the big bull-eye man of the Horned Frogs, was chosen for the quarterback post on many of the nation-wide selections. Big Darrell Lester, towering Texas Christian pivot, gained widespread All-American honors for the second year in succession. Crack Ed Bill Crass, L. S. U. back, and Justin Rukas, hard-charging Tiger tackle, rate as All-Southwestern Conference selections.

Slingshot Sammy Baugh, the most accurate tosser of a ball seen in modern times, who has completed more than half of the passes he has thrown, will have worthy opposition in his specialty in the person of Abe Mickal, famous L. S. U. passing genius.

This year Abe has been hampered by injuries sustained during the summer, and therefore he is used only sparingly. However, the man who Biff Jones called the "greatest forward passer I have ever seen" has thrown several touchdown passes for L. S. U. this season, and when he hooks up in an aerial duel with Slingin' Sam, the Texas Man, the fans can confidently expect one of the most thrilling games of recent years.

(Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Toronto Maple Leafs met in the finals for the Stanley Cup, emblematic of the hockey championship, with the Maroons emerging victorious in three straight. Underdogs in pre-series calculations, the Maroons sprung one of the greatest upsets in hockey history.

Jimmy Ward and Baldy Northcott collaborated to give the Maroons 3-2, 3-1 and 4-1 victories.

Tommy Gorman, Montreal manager who won the cup while leading the Chicago Blackhawks in 1933-1934, established a run of seven playoff series games without a setback.

Polo

Jock Whitney's Greentree four won the United States Open Polo Championship by defeating Aurora 7 to 6 in an overtime match. Pete Bostwick drove the winning tally between the upstarts.

The Greentree polo team also won the Monty Waterbury cup by defeating Winston Guest's Templeton outfit, 14-13, at Meadowbrook.

Motor Boats

While El Legarto triumphed in the Gold Cup motor boat championships at Bolton Landing, N. Y., Herbert Mendelsohn's Notre Dame took chief honors by winning the President's cup at Washington in 1:03:49 4-5 for the three heats.

Betty V. won all three heats of the National Sweepstakes race at Red Bank and Gar Wood, Jr., set two records for Class A Amateurs.

Wrestling

Danno O'Mahoney, 22-year-old Irish wrestling star, had the heavyweight wrestling show to himself after defeating Jim Londos for the crown in Boston. O'Mahoney took on all contenders, former champions, and turned them back with a grip known as the "Irish Whip," winning over 60 successive heats without suffering a defeat.

Bobsled

The American Olympic Committee selected the following 15 members to represent the U. S. in the Fourth Winter Olympic Games at Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Germany:

Donna Fox, Gilbert Colgate and Billy Fiske, New York; Ivan Brown, Keene Valley; Max Bly, Lake George; Dick Lawrence, White Plains; A. Washbond, Bob Martin, C. Merkle, James Bickford, John Shene, Curtis Stevens, J. H. Stevens, Francis Tyler, and Hugo Varno, of Lake Placid.

J. Hubert Stevens and his brother, Curtis P. Stevens, won the two-man National A. A. U. title in 1:57.24, setting a record for the Lake Placid course. Curtis Steven's team won the National A. A. U. four-man championship in 1:43.66, a record.

Bell Funeral Tomorrow

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.—Funeral services for John Bell, former Attorney General and father of the Pennsylvania Public Service Commission law, will be held here tomorrow.

He was 73, and succumbed to a heart ailment complicated by pneumonia. He was a former District Attorney.

Plan Big Celebration

New York, Dec. 30.—The loudest, wettest, hottest celebration since the War will be New York's New Year's Eve celebration. Few people aside from the crippled, aged or strictly juvenile plan to remain home, away from the towns entertainment, it was indicated today. Reservations at night clubs and the better hotels have been exhausted since last week.

In the swank hotels and night spots, not even a G-man could slip into a ringside seat.

MATHEMATICAL MIRACLES

PARIS, Dec. 30.—(INS)—A French girl who can perform the most astounding mathematical feats without putting a single figure on paper has been discovered in the person of Monique Lacombe. She thinks nothing of taking 97 to its tenth power, in a few seconds, or of adding up 20 or 30 numbers of a dozen figures each. The curious feature of Mlle. Lacombe's accomplishments is that she declares she hardly knows how to count and has been to school little.
